The James W. Fitzgibbon Scholarship in Architecture recognizes outstanding academic performance and promise in the field of architecture. Washington University’s College of Architecture offers the scholarship to an entering first-year student who plans to pursue the Bachelor of Science or Bachelor of Design in Architecture. We encourage you to apply if you have demonstrated outstanding scholastic potential for a professional career in architecture and are able to present evidence of your creative ability through a portfolio.

TO APPLY:
- On your application for admission to the Class of 2022, select Architecture as your major.
- Through the WashU Pathway, submit an Application for Academic Scholarships and Fellowships, checking the box for the Fitzgibbon Scholarship.
- Write an original essay (no more than 300 words) that addresses your interest in architecture with emphasis on why you feel it is a course of study suited to you and your experiences. The evaluation of the essay will focus on thoughtfulness of response, creativity, and the quality of your writing.
- Submit a digital portfolio, consisting of 10–20 pieces of recent work. The portfolio may include freehand drawings, paintings, sculptures, architectural design models and drawings, ceramics, etc. While you may include examples of drafting and CAD, we will place emphasis on projects that show a range of creative and spatial thinking.

  Digital Portfolio: Submit your digital portfolio using the SlideRoom function of the Common or Coalition Application. The SlideRoom form allows you to include pertinent information about each piece including title of work, medium, dimensions, and date completed. If you submitted a SlideRoom portfolio with your application for admission, there is no need to submit an additional portfolio.
